- This workshop is intended to be highly interactive. The workshop will adopt a mix of expert presentations sessions, interactive panel discussions and working group discussions.
- We will be sharing resource materials with participants (publications, legal instruments, case law etc.). Should speakers wish to propose any materials to be shared, kindly share copies of the same with Ted Wandera at twandera@kelinkenya.org that we can make these available to participants in advance of the training

Kindly make these available to Ted Wandera (details above). Speakers are free to adapt their presentation to the actual circumstances in the event.
- When preparing their presentations, speakers should note that the workshop will include participants from diverse professional and social backgrounds including health professionals, legal professional, human rights advocates, community representatives, and public officers. In particular, speakers should note that the workshop will also include representatives from key populations and are therefore encouraged to adopt human rights sensitive and inclusive language and avoid language that may be stigmatizing.

Moderators' guidelines

- Moderators are encouraged to ensure that the panel discussions are highly interactive and allow ample time for plenary discussions and questions. Session moderators may wish to make some brief remarks on the theme of the session before introducing the speakers and chairing the subsequent discussion. In order to ensure maximum time for discussion, the moderator's introductory remarks should be brief. In particular, moderators are asked to ensure that speakers keep to time and that there is ample opportunity for other participants to contribute to the discussion.

Length and structure of session

- Speakers are asked to keep their presentations brief in order to allow maximum time for interactive discussions during the session. Each session lasts one and a half hours to two hours and the aim is to allow at least half an hour of participatory discussion.
