The Nairobi Strategy on Tuberculosis and Human Rights: A Human Rights-based Response to Tuberculosis

Primary Objective: To develop and implement a human rights-based response to TB at the global, regional, national and local levels.

Sub-Objective 1

Implement a human rights-based response to TB through diverse advocacy strategies.

Stream 1: Empower and support networks of affected communities of people with TB, TB survivors, and broader civil society at global, regional, national, and local levels.
- Develop and support existing networks of people affected by TB
- Design and conduct legal trainings for affected communities and broader civil society
- Empower and support people with TB, TB survivors and broader civil society to make use of judicial and quasi-judicial mechanisms to safeguard their rights
- Develop, publish and disseminate materials for community and broader civil society action
- Empower and support people with TB, TB survivors and broader civil society to engage in setting national TB program targets

Stream 2: Enhance judiciary and legal communities’ awareness on implementation of a human rights-based response to TB.
- Organize and conduct judicial workshops
- Develop, publish and disseminate a judicial bench guide on TB, human rights and the law
- Develop and support a network of legal, medical and public health experts
- Create and support a closed online community of relevant experts, including from law, medicine, public health, psychology, social work, economics, and anthropology

Stream 3: Expand legislators’, policymakers’, and administrators’ capacity to incorporate human rights-based approaches to TB in laws, policies, and practices.
- Organize and conduct workshops for law and policy makers and administrators
- Draft and promote model legislation that implements a human rights-based response to TB
- Develop, publish and disseminate a handbook on TB and human rights for legislators, policymakers, and administrators

Stream 4: Engage and advise international organizations and experts on the implementation of human rights-based approaches to TB in global policies and programs.
- Engage and advise international organizations and experts on the need to incorporate a human rights-based response to TB in their work
- Engage and advise bilateral and multilateral aid organizations and philanthropic foundations on the need to incorporate a human rights-based response to TB in their funding and programming

Stream 5: Sensitize health care workers in public and private sectors on the need to incorporate a human rights-based response to TB in their work.
- Organize and conduct workshops with health care workers
- Develop, publish and disseminate a handbook on TB and human rights for health care workers

Sub-Objective 2

Develop further the conceptual, legal and normative content and evidence base for a human rights-based response to TB through interdisciplinary research and scholarship and close collaboration with people affected by TB.

Stream 1: Formulate and clarify the conceptual, legal and normative content of a human rights-based response to TB.
- Research, develop and publish a conceptual, legal and normative framework for a human rights-based response to TB
- Organize and conduct interdisciplinary academic workshops and collaborations
- Research, draft and publish scholarly articles on the various aspects and components of a human rights-based response to TB
- Research, draft and publish a case law compendium on TB, human rights and the law
- Design, create and maintain an online database of case law involving TB

Stream 2: Conduct qualitative and quantitative research to generate an evidence base for the effectiveness of a human rights-based response to TB.
- Design and conduct interdisciplinary quantitative and qualitative research examining various aspects and components of a human rights-based response to TB
- Facilitate inclusive, community-led discussions to develop and promote use of ethical standards to gather and use TB-related data

Read the full Strategy here